

Benjamin Shiller is an Assistant Professor of Economics at Brandeis University. He received his B.A. from the same institution and his Ph.D. from the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania. After receiving his doctoral degree, he spent a year as a visiting fellow at the National Bureau of Economic Research, as part of the Economics of Digitization and Copyright Initiative.

His research has focused on the economic impact of digitization. Specifically, he has analyzed the impact on optimal pricing, supplier coordination, and resale. His research has been featured in the press, in notable publications such as The Economist, Forbes, The Washington Post, and VOX EU.